

Feza service

FANS of Mongezi Feza will be glad to hear that the trumpeter's friends were able to borrow enough money to send his body back to South Africa last week. A wake was held on Saturday, and a simple memorial service took place on Sunday morning at the church of St Luke With St Paul, Camden Square, London.

Chris McGregor, founder of the Brotherhood Of Breath, flew in from his French home last Friday to arrange some tribal hymns for the Brotherhood to play at the service.

A special memorial concert is to be held in February, featuring dozens of top British jazz musicians, the proceeds of which will be used to repay the Brotherhood's benefactors.

MELODY
MAKER →
DEC 17th
1975